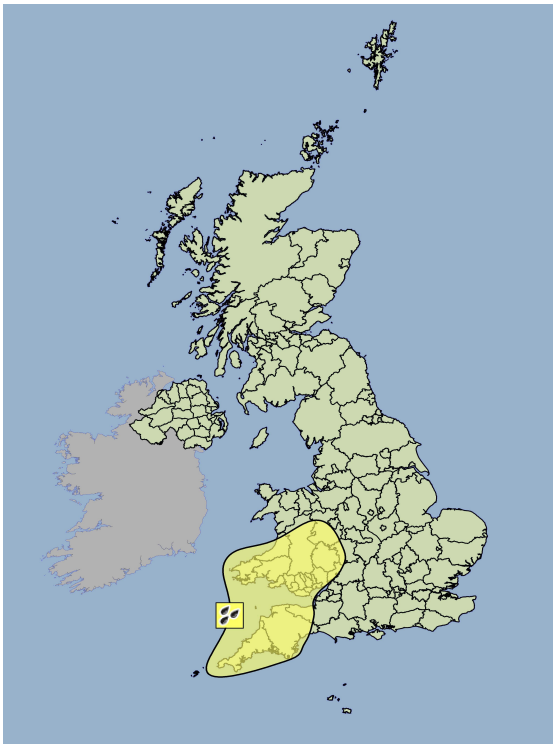
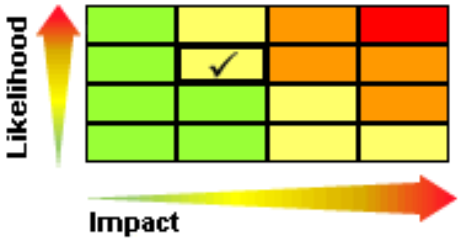
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A depression will pass northeastwards across the UK on Wednesday and early on Thursday, its associated bands of rain bringing further wet conditions to many areas. In particular, 10 to 20 mm of rainfall will fall quite widely in parts of Wales, south west England and the Midlands. 30 to 40 mm may fall in the wettest spots in Wales. Though impacts as significant as seen recently are not expected, given current sensitive hydrological conditions there is a risk of further surface water flooding in Wales, and both river and surface water flooding in Cornwall, Devon, Somerset and the Midlands.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:00 on Wed, 08th Jan 2014 until 09:00 on Thu, 09th Jan 2014

Periods of heavy rain will affect parts of Wales, south west England and some western parts of the Midlands during the latter half of Wednesday, clearing quickly on Thursday morning.

The public should be aware of the potential for further disruption from flooding, or the delay in recovery from existing flooding in the locations which have been affected recently. This updates the warning originally issued on Tuesday.
